Description:

Did you ever think about working or partnering with AAG to scale an idea, a service, or a program to benefit geography or geographers? Perhaps you want to better connect geographers across institutions around a specific topic or goal, or perhaps you think some resources or practices could benefit from being shared across our membership. If so, this workshop is for you!

In the first part of this workshop AAG staff will:
- Present on why and how AAG is seeking to partner with AAG members, AAG Groups, or Organizations serving geographers.
- Provide examples of AAG partnership, what role AAG would play in a partnership, and what support (including grants support) we are prepared to provide
- Provide examples of potential funding opportunities AAG is interested to seek with partners (see an initial list of opportunities at the bottom of this description)

In the second part of this workshop, audience participants will be able to discuss ideas with AAG staff, learn about grant development and opportunities with AAG, and ask any questions to better understand what a feasible or realistic partnership might look like for both you, and AAG.

AAG is prepared to work with and train partners who may not have experience developing funding applications or leading grants, but who have clear leadership and ideas that would benefit geography and geographers. We acknowledge the

MORE ABOUT AAG PARTNERSHIPS

"AAG has a vision — We want to be a national fulcrum for grant and research opportunities for the discipline's transformation, and we want to provide technical support to partner institutions and organizations seeking to share their knowledge and level up their prominence in research. The common throughline of the projects we encourage is commitment to the central principles of belonging, access, justice, equity, diversity, and inclusion (BAJEDI)." —Risha RaQuelle, AAG Chief Strategy Officer.
